

Alyse Jean Zwick

Alyse Jean Zwick, at the age of one, booked her first national commercial for Downy. Her love for performing extended into her schooling. As a teen, she attended Pebblebrook High School and The Cobb County Center for Excellence in the Performing Arts, in Atlanta, Georgia. She was accepted into their dance/musical theater company and was a drama major with a dance/voice minor.

After graduating in 2004, Alyse received an acting scholarship to Wright State University where she continued her training as a theater major. Upon returning to New York City, she became a working actor. Currently, she is training privately.

Some of Alyse's recent credits are "Stand-up Nation with Greg Giraldo," The National cover of Newsweek Magazine, National campaign for ESPRIT sportswear, Lady Footlocker, and voice over's for Clean and Clear, Nancy Drew, and The Ivy League.

Alyse has always been known for her positive attitude, hard work, and ability to take directions well.
